Excerpt: . marine uses has been made by the Carnegie Institution of Washington in the equipment of the non-magnetic ship Carnegie. This vessel of 600 tons has no wrought iron or steel in her construction, and less than a pound of cast iron per ton of displacement. This absence of magnetic iron was necessary because the ship was built for magnetic survey purposes, and the magnetic needle is affected by the presence of iron in its neighborhood. When it came to the selection and design of a power apparatus for this ship the builders were confronted with a problem. Producer gas and gas engine was finally chosen as the system best adapted and as also the most flexible as regards fuel supply. After a careful investigation it was seen that producer gas was reliable and would occupy the least space in the ship, and that...
