Excerpt: .of their creditors preferences when making these insolvent assignments. The abuses that had grown up under this system had become so flagrant, and had received so many judicial rebukes, that it became necessary to enact some law whereby all of the creditors of an insolvent would be entitled to an equal pro rata share in the distribution of the trust estate created by the assignment. It will be seen, therefore, that, as the creditors of the insolvent are entitled to share equally in the fund, there is no necessity to allude to the requirements of an assignment, as far as regards the drawing up of the same. The form given in the appendix is taken from one now on file, and which has stood the test of a final accounting. It is very simple in its form, and can be adapted easily to any...
