Excerpt: . . . MR. DODDS OPENING SPEECH. Ladies and Gentlemen: We are met here to-night to honor a noble man. In doing so, we honor ourselves. To be an accepted friend of S. S. Packard is a certificate of character. I know well he does not desire any words of flattery or fulsome eulogy. He was never known to blush, yet he is a modest man, for all that. But one fact in relation to him, like a city set upon a hill, cannot be hid. He has, in his long and active life, been useful to his fellow-men to a most marked extent, and has long had a recognized position as a leader among educators and philanthropists. It is largely in recognition of this fact that this notable assemblage of his friends is gathered to-night, and he must permit us to speak of this characteristic of...
