Brand New Book  Print on Demand .TOUCHING THEM ALL is the first book of a trilogy that engages many of life's most intriguing questions, both practical and metaphysical. Charlie Howell is a baseball player of uncommon ability whose perpetually restless mind seeks to touch all the bases and embrace a life of inquiry. He is fascinated by the workings and capabilities of the human brain, so as a young student he immerses himself in the discipline of neuroscience, which he uses as his framework to analyze and understand the world he lives in. Of course, no life fully lived escapes the slings and arrows of disappointment and tragedy, and Charlie often struggles to make sense of why life unfolds as it does. Blessed with natural intellectual curiosity, Charlie learns how to combine his knowledge of how the brain functions with a wonderful capacity for absorbing new knowledge and inculcating the wisdom of those he encounters, particularly one Sarah Wilson. As Charlie discovers, however, there are no shortcuts to learning life's harshest and most enduring lessons. The full breadth of human emotion cannot be experienced by reading a book, watching a movie, or even observing another person. Just as consciousness is unique to each of us, so are the color and range of our emotions. Life is never the same for any two people, and only by living through our own unique experiences can we ever hope to know what life is really about. Charlie Howell willingly takes on that journey, and in the process he discovers a simple truth. In a recent interview, Peter Schuller offered some insight into that simple truth and how he came to write the trilogy. Ever since...
