CHAPTER XIII ANTHY TAKES COMMAND NTHY was always late in reaching the mornings. It was one of the days when old Mrs. Parker came to help her, and it was necessary that the week be properly started in the household of the Doanes. It is said of Goethe that he was prouder of his knowledge of the science of optics--which was mostly wrong--than he was of his poetry. Genius is often like that. It was so in the case of old Mrs. Parker, who considered herself incomparable as a cook (and once--this is town report--baked her spectacles in a custard pie), and held lightly her genius as a journalist. On any bright morning she could go out on her stoop, turn once or twice around, sniff the breezes, and tell you in voluminous came at all, on Monday language what her neighbours were going to have for dinner, with interesting digressions upon the character, social standing, and economic condition of each of them. Though she often tried Anthy s orderly soul, she was as much of a feature of the household on certain days every week as the whatnot in the corner of the parlour. She had been coming almost as long as Anthy could remember. For years she had amused, provoked, and tyrannized over Anthy s father, troubled his digestion with pies, and given him innumerable items for the Star. She was as good as any reporter. On this particular autumn morning...
