Suetonius, who refers to this measure (Octav. 46), seems to say that only the decurions to the number of one hundred in each city, had been indirectly elected by the popular assembly, the right which they received from Augustus constituted a sort of sufirage by two grades, which is not without analogy with the procedure by which French senators and consular judges are elected. This attempt at organization of universal suffrage in Italy, combined with the provincial representation, --of which we shall speak later, --might have produced the happiest results, uniting by free institutions the various parts of the Empire. But this solution of the political problem, which for a moment seemed possible, was quickly lost to sight; the Emperors knew not how to develop these fruitful germs, or willingly sufiered them to perish. of the twentyeight colonies founded by Augustus...
